For King and Country

The British Empire in 1914 had been the world's leading state for nearly a century. Its possessions and dominions stretched across the globe under the watchful eyes of the Royal Navy, and its influence could be felt far and wide. Without long borders to defend or enemies at its gates, Britain instead made use of a small, mobile, and highly-trained army of regulars who were kept in shape through constant drilling and marksmanship training.

As a result, the United Kingdom entered the Great War as the only belligerent nation fielding a fully professional army. Decades of institutional knowledge and experience in colonial wars resulted in perhaps the finest soldiers in the world pledging their allegiance to the British crown.

National Perks:

Expert Marksmen - Every rifle unit starts as Experienced.

Professionalism - Readiness and morale decay rate is lower for rifle units.
